

THE MOUNTAINEERS

LENGTH, 775 FEET.

A moving picture photographer is seen taking a picture of some boys climbing a tree. He is unaware that he will witness a tragedy, which soon appears within range of his camera.

A hunter, who had laid down to rest is jolted by a mountaineer. When he awakes and tries to find himself, the mountaineer shot him and threw him down a high precipice seemingly dead.

The hunter is found, long up by an old farmer who runs home to call for help. Finding the father of his daughter at his home takes him along.

In the meantime the hunter has been found by some Revenue officers, who are on the lookout for mountaineers.

The mountaineer comes to the home of an old farmer, who is the father of his daughter. When she is seen, she is taken to a room. The hunter has fallen in love with the daughter of the farmer. The old farmer is shocked and sends her away.

In the meantime, the mountaineer is being taken to the court. He is found by some Revenue officers, who are on the lookout for mountaineers.

The next scene brings us to the court room where the father is tried for the charge of murder. He is found guilty.

At the critical moment, the picture shows the father with his hands and feet bound. The judge of the court says: "A full-time shooting party, and the crowd has been shot down. The mountaineer is dead."

The picture of the father is shown. He is found by some Revenue officers, who are on the lookout for mountaineers.

Neighborly Neighbors

LENGTH, 395 FEET

A young bride is much admired by the neighbors especially by Mr. Brown, who plays the violin and Mr. Jones, who plays the trombone.

They send letters to the young bride and announce their visit for eight o'clock, after which time they expect the young husband to be gone to the club.

The angry bride shows the letters to her husband, who dictates a letter to the wives of the lovesick musicians, inviting them to call at 8 p.m.

It is better imagined than described, how the two lovesick musicians try to play themselves in to the heart of the beautiful bride, while their wives are listening in the next room.

When at last the wives' patience is exhausted, they rush in to the room and guide their husbands to their own home sweet home.

For the next fourteen days the husbands take their meals standing.
